

If you think one of your online accounts has been compromised, do you know what to look for?

Signs an online account may be compromised or hacked:

- There are posts to your social media page that you didn't create that may be encouraging your followers to click on a link.
- You are seeing frequent, random popups.
- Your online passwords are not working.
- Your contacts or colleagues report they are getting email from you that you never sent.
- Your information was exposed in a data breach, malware infection or lost/stolen device.

- Change passwords to all accounts that have been compromised and all other key accounts as soon as possible.
- If you can't access your account because the password has been changed, contact the service provider immediately. Then just follow their steps to recover your account.

Facebook, Twitter, YouTube, Instagram, Gmail/Google, Yahoo and others, all have resources online to help. Once you're back in control you should review all security and privacy setting of all your online accounts.

Now what do I do?

- Notify all of your contacts of what happened and tell them they may receive spam messages appearing to come from you and they shouldn't open it, or click on any links sent from your account.
- If you think your computer is infected, be sure your security software is up to date, and scan your system for malware.
